Mini-Golf Build and Food Donation: A Creative, Competitive, and Charitable Team Experience

Looking for a way to combine creativity, friendly competition, and community impact? The Mini-Golf Build and Food Donation event challenges your team to design and build their own mini-golf holes—using non-perishable food items that are later donated to a local food bank.

This interactive program encourages collaboration, resourcefulness, and out-of-the-box thinking—all while making a meaningful difference for people in need.

Program Agenda

After an energizing warm-up, your group is divided into golf teams of 10. Each team is tasked with designing and building a unique mini-golf hole using canned and boxed goods, indoor/outdoor carpeting, cardboard, and decorative materials. Teams are responsible for the hole's construction, layout, theme, and even the rules of play.

Once the full course is completed, participants rotate through the holes to play a round of team-designed miniature golf. Officials ensure each hole's rules are followed and that gameplay stays on par (pun intended!). No golf experience necessary—this game is all about innovation and fun.

Following the tournament, teams break down their creations and repack the food for donation. In many cases, a representative from the receiving organization joins to personally thank the group and share how the donations will be used.

Clients Talk About this Program

When the 6,000 pounds of food was donated, the director pulled me aside and said, 'We had a meeting 3 weeks ago and came to the tough realization that this fall we would not have enough food to feed all the needy families of Las Vegas in our neediest time between Thanksgiving and Christmas. In one amazing effort, you guys have solved that problem. Thank you!
